Over the last decade China has struggled to identify an effective Korea policy. Throughout history China has repeatedly engaged in political and military conflicts in Korea. Chinese leaders want to avoid another Korean war and seek a denuclearized peninsula. However, North Korea’s nuclear and missile development programs have compelled Chinese leaders to rethink their approach. This talk will discuss China’s policy options and how the country might respond to this growing threat to regional peace and stability.

Dr. REN Xiao is currently a professor of international politics at the Institute of International Studies (IIS), Fudan University, Shanghai, China, and Director of the Center for the Study of Chinese Foreign Policy. Previously he was Senior Fellow and Director of the Asia Pacific Studies Department, Shanghai Institute for International Studies (SIIS). Dr. REN studied in the University of Essex in England (1990-91) and held research or visiting positions at the University of Turku, Finland, Nagoya University, Japan, and The George Washington University in Washington, DC, USA. His work has appeared in journals such as The Pacific Review, Asia Policy, Third World Quarterly, Journal of Contemporary China, East Asia: An International Quarterly etc. His other publications include New Frontiers in China’s Foreign Relations (co-editor, Lexington Books, 2011) and U.S.-China-Japan Triangular Relationship, The Zhejiang People’s Publishing House, 2002, in Chinese). Dr. REN serves on the editorial boards of several international academic journals including Globalizations, Journal of Global Policy and Governance, East Asia: An International Quarterly, and East Asian Policy. Dr. REN worked at the Chinese Embassy in Tokyo from 2010 to 2012. He received his Ph.D. in political science from Fudan University in 1992. (Email: renxiao2006@fudan.edu.cn)