Tyler J. Boes
Department of Economics

Tyler Boes is from Kalamazoo, Michigan and a graduate of Kalamazoo Christian High School. At Western Michigan University, he is double majoring in economics and applied mathematics, minoring in general business and actuarial science, is a member of the Lee Honors College, and expects to graduate in May 2021. After graduation he intends to look for a job in data analysis or actuarial work, while also preparing for the financial mathematics actuarial exam and the probability actuarial exam. Eventually, he hopes to pursue a master's degree in economics, mathematics or statistics. Tyler is currently working on his honors thesis, with a topic regarding stationarity testing of Major League Baseball run generation models. In fact, the movie that got him interested in studying economics was "Moneyball," which is about baseball statistics. Tyler has been a part of the mathematics honors society, Phi Kappa Phi and Alpha Lambda Delta. During his time at WMU, he was sure to make his learning experience beyond the classroom joining several student organizations where he held leadership positions such as treasurer, secretary, and vice president for Refugee Outreach Collective, the Club Tennis Team and Students for a Sustainable Earth.
