

Integrated Supply Management Program

What Sets ISM Broncos Apart

Western Michigan University's integrated supply management program has continued to grow since the first two ISM students graduated in the spring of 1993. Today, nearly 100 students graduate from the program each year. These graduates are "job ready" from day one, often for positions above entry level.

The unique curriculum of the ISM program is the result of integrating supply chain, information technology, continuous improvement and engineering curriculum from five departments across two colleges.
