ABOUT THE PROGRAM

The special education program is an innovative and demanding program preparing special education teachers to meet the unique needs of a diverse range of preK-12 students with learning disabilities or early childhood developmental delay. Candidates are prepared to implement evidence-based instructional practices and behavioral strategies promoting access to and success in the general education curriculum through assessment, intentional instruction, and evaluation. WMU’s special education program also includes preparation leading to certification in elementary education preK-3.

PROGRAM STRENGTHS

→ Students participate in a field-based experience every semester mentored by a highly skilled special education teacher.
→ The special education program faculty have experience utilizing advanced technology for preparing teachers, as well as other innovative instructional techniques.
→ The program is accredited by the State of Michigan and the Council for Accreditation of Educator Preparation.
→ Candidates will have the opportunity to participate in an accelerated graduate degree with an endorsement in emotional impairments (EI) as an undergraduate. The additional hours for the EI endorsement will be billed at the undergraduate rate.
→ Candidates will also have the opportunity to seek a Masters in Special Education with an additional endorsement in autism.

Students are admitted as a cohort, forming close bonds with professors and peers. Our cohort model supports a strong sense of community. Students develop a strong professional identity as special educators.

Michigan school principals ranked 99% of new teachers prepared at WMU as “effective” or “highly effective” in 2019-20.
