Detroit is now considered to be the hotbed for urban agriculture and local food system development. Drawing from her study of these activities in Detroit, and on conversations with community leaders over the last decade, Pothukuchi will discuss how ideas of community have grown and evolved as activities to grow urban agriculture and local food systems have developed.