Program Updates

It is hard to believe that spring has almost arrived. Although the winter was mild, there is something about hearing the birds and seeing the sunshine that can revitalize us.

As some of you know we have big plans to expand our space by working on the backyard. We have secured funds and we are currently waiting on the plans to be completed. It is our hope to have walking paths, seated areas, places to play outdoor games and lots of interesting plants and sculptures.

We probably will start the project in late summer and will be able to use it before the snow flies next year.

We also want to say that we have made it through another winter without COVID impacting services. We appreciate people staying home when they are sick so we can reduce the spread of germs. We are still wearing masks and will continue to do so until given the all clear.
This semester, we have a doctoral student with us exploring the impact of using theatre activities like mirroring, dance, working with prompts and story-telling on the emotional wellbeing of our participants. We have had such fun trying new things and providing activities that our participants remember from when they were younger.

Calli has been pleased with the level of client participation and the joy she has been observing.
