The Timothy Light Center for Chinese Studies presents a lecture

“Taiwan and China in a World of Globalization”

by

Dr. Tse-Kang Leng

Research Fellow of Institute of Political Science of Academia Sinica (IPSAS)
Professor of Political Science at National Chengchi University
Senior Fulbright Fellow at the University of Virginia

4:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 21
Brown Hall Room 2028

Dr. Leng’s talk will first trace the historical legacies of relationship between Taiwan and China, followed by discussion on major debates and controversies on this unique relationship. He will cover how Taiwan has tried to adopt a policy of globalization, including comprehensive engagements with China, and the political costs that have come with the efforts to deepen and institutionalize cross-Taiwan Strait relations.

Dr. Leng’s research interests focus on theories of international relations and cross-Straits relations, political economy of globalization, and political economy of urban development in China. His recent academic works include: “Local States, Institutional Changes, and Innovations Systems: Beijing and Shanghai Compared”; “Coping with China in Hard Times: Taiwan in Global and Domestic Perspectives”; "Politics of Centrally-Administered Municipalities in China" and, “Governance of Biodiversity Conservation in China and Taiwan.”
