Guide to Retention of Business Records

A well-defined record retention program is an important part of Western Michigan University's record keeping system. The following list details some factors the University considers when retaining records.

Federal and state tax laws • It is not uncommon for retention of the same information and/or documents to be required by more than one governmental agency for different periods of time. Those records that have more than one retention period should be kept for the longest period to ensure compliance with laws and regulations.

Other government regulations • When there is no legal requirement for the retention of records, the retention policy should be reasonable and developed in good faith. For example, the Federal Paperwork Reduction Act of 1990 adopts a maximum 3-year retention period for any records other than tax, medical, or health.

Statutes of limitation on litigation that may affect your business • Consider statutes of limitation when decisions are made over the length of time particular records are retained. A systematic record retention and destruction program will reduce both litigation costs and exposure to liability. A general guideline would be six years.

The general needs of your business for information retrieval • In a centralized filing system, record maintenance, retention, and destruction are appropriate for documents used by more than one person. Decentralized filing systems are appropriate for documents not needed by more than one person.

E-mail and freedom of information • E-mail messages, both those stored in the computer and those printed out, should not be considered private. E-mail messages may be considered public records pursuant to Michigan and federal law and may be subject to disclosure. If there is no official University business reason to keep, store, or print an e-mail message, it should be disposed of promptly.

Note • Notwithstanding the above, if you encounter a situation that has the potential of resulting claims or litigation against the University, you should retain any and all records that would support the University's position for as long as that potential exists. If you have any questions about how long to retain a record in such an instance, contact the Office of the General Counsel.

Western Michigan University Archives Records Transfer/Disposal Request Form • This Record Retention Program is an ongoing process in which records will periodically be reviewed and updated. Therefore, the form attached to the end of this document should be submitted to Business Services for any of the following reasons:

1. if any department needs to include records in this document
2. if any department needs to have their record retention periods reviewed
3. if any department needs to eliminate records not addressed in this document

If the University's period for retaining records is less than the required period of a grant or contract, it is the responsibility of the department to retain pertinent documentation on individual projects. Specific contract or grant regulations should be followed if the requirement is more than 3 years.
The Grants & Contracts Office is responsible for retaining (1) the official contract files, including the original award and any amendments, required sponsor approvals, and subcontracts; and (2) the official accounting records, including financial transactions, reports, and invoices.
In the event that any litigation, claim, or audit is started before the end of the specified retention period, the documentation must be retained until all issues have been resolved.
