Clothing and Dress

Garments
Eighteenth-century women of European descent generally wore the same basic garments. Fashion and regional tastes influenced their look. The women of New France wanted to dress as fashionably as they could, especially on Sundays. The latest European fashions—even silk gowns—reached the furthest frontier regions. Catholic priests often deplored women's wearing of immodest and expensive clothing in styles beyond their status. Many observers also commented on the short skirts (mid-calf) and jackets (rather than gowns) that Habitant women wore.

Caps and Hats
A coiffe (cap) covered a woman's hair at all times unless her hair was elaborately styled.

When outdoors, a wide-brimmed hat kept the sun from women's faces.

Articles of Dress
Women wore a simple chemise (shift), usually made of linen as an undergarment and a nightgown. Over it, they wore at least two jupons (petticoats) tied about the waist. Whatsome stays provided the foundation for the gown or jacket, gave the rounded fashionable shape, and provided an exact posture. While at home in a state of déshabillé (less formal dress) a woman might wear a quilted vest or jumps rather than the stays. Pockets were tied about the waist rather than sewn into women's clothing—usually under the top petticoat, which had slits to allow access to the pockets. A jacket or gown went over the stays. Around the shoulders women wore a fichu (nerkerchief) tucked into the front of her gown.

Shoes
In the cities or on Sundays women wore the leather or brocade shoes over thick-high stockings. Habitant women often wore mocassins and/or sabots (wooden shoes) while working. In the summer they often went barefoot.

Stylish 18th century woman's shoes

Adornment
Women of both France and New France wore earrings, medallions, and crosses or crucifixes on ribbons around their necks, all of which have been recovered from Fort St. Joseph.

18th century earrings from Fort St. Joseph

Inexpensive finger rings from Fort St. Joseph

Needlework pockets

Quilted petticoat

18th century ones from Fort St. Joseph